

In your view, is it best practice for a company to notify its customers when a product is reclassified?

Why or why not?

If yes, how would that notification take place?

When Lattice reclassified its chips in 2004, should they have notified customers via email or some other official communication?

Given your experience, why do you think a case was not brought against the plaintiff in the United States?

* Apologies if these aren't appropriate questions*

